DECLARATION

I, Kelli Jordan, am a paralegal employed by Gammon & Grange, P.C. On August 2, 2000 I spoke to several residents and business owners in Littlefield, Arizona area. I asked each whether he or she considered Littlefield, Arizona to be a community – a distinct population grouping with its own interests, businesses, and services. I spoke to a volunteer at the Littlefield Fire Department, a representative of the Littlefield Elementary School, the owner of Trail End Autos, a representative of the Transportation Department, a representative of Roadrunner Scenic Realty, and a representative of Beaver Dam Service station. All considered Littlefield, Arizona to be a community. I also spoke to the following individuals: Royce Jones, a staff member of Dixie Escalante Electrical Services (office in Littlefield); Randy Burt, employee at Tri-State Towing and Repair (Littlefield-area business); Glenn Lee, owner of Glenn's Mobile Repair (Littlefield-area business); Rhea Carver and Rich Felix, owner and employee (respectively) at Pelkey's Mobile Estates (Littlefield-area business); and Wally Graham, owner of Wally's Auto Repair (Littlefield-area business). All of these individuals agreed that Littlefield, AZ is a community as defined by the Federal Communications Commission.

In addition, I learned that the population of Littlefield grows to approximately 3,000 people in the winter due to people traveling from Utah, Idaho, Montana, and Colorado to escape the cold. I learned that the elementary school (K-8) has approximately 250-275 students and that plans are in process to build a high school in Littlefield, which should be completed in 2005. Aside from its own businesses, also mentioned was the fact that Littlefield has its own golf course (9 holes expanding to 18 in the future), a post office, gas station (being reconstructed to serve as a small grocery store), fire department, church, satellite community college, two cemeteries, etc. One business owner stated the population of Littlefield has more than tripled in the last several years.

This statement is made under penalty of perjury.

Signed on the 3rd day of August 2000.

Kelli Dumas Jordan, Paralegal
Gammon & Grange, P.C.
